About Us

Our establishment is on 2001 A.D with the vision of "To be a sanctuary where luxury meets nature, offering a peaceful escape that preserves the environment and uplifts the local community." and to be the premier mountain getaway connecting adventurers and families with breathtaking landscapes and authentic local culture.

We celebrate local traditions and warm hospitality, making every guest feel at home while empowering the surrounding community. Our resort is located in the heart of the jungle of Chitwan National Park. Our main guests are families, couples, adventure seekers, or corporate groups.

At Chitwan Safari Resort, nature is not simply a backdrop for tourism—it is the guiding principle of everything we do. We believe that human well-being is inseparable from the health of the natural world. When soil is fertile, forests are protected, and communities are supported, tourism can become a pathway toward regeneration rather than depletion.

Our philosophy embraces a holistic relationship between land, people, culture, and spirit. Every experience at Prakriti is designed to encourage reflection, connection, and respect for the natural environment. By integrating organic farming, ecological design, and community engagement, we aim to create a place where visitors experience not only comfort but also inspiration to live more harmoniously with the Earth.

Why Regenerative Tourism Matters Now

The world is experiencing rapid environmental change, climate instability, biodiversity loss, and growing social imbalance. In this context, tourism can no longer focus only on enjoyment or economic growth. It must also contribute positively to the places it touches.

At Chitwan Safari Resort, we believe tourism should actively support ecological restoration, community well-being, and cultural integrity.

01

Environmental Responsibility

Natural ecosystems are under pressure from overdevelopment, waste, water stress, and climate change. Regenerative tourism encourages practices that restore soil health, protect biodiversity, reduce resource consumption, and strengthen local ecosystems.

02

Climate Consciousness

Travel and hospitality industries have a role in addressing climate challenges. Regenerative approaches promote renewable energy, waste reduction, sustainable sourcing. and low-impact design—helping reduce environmental footprints while improving resilience.

03

Community Empowerment

Tourism should create meaningful local benefits. Regenerative models prioritize local employment, local sourcing, skill development, and fair partnerships—ensuring that communities grow alongside tourism.

04

Cultural Preservation

Authentic experiences rooted in local culture help protect traditions, heritage, and identity. Regenerative tourism respects cultural values and encourages meaningful exchange rather than superficial consumption.

05

Conscious Travel Trends

Today's travelers—especially younger generations—seek deeper experiences: connection, reflection, learning, and purpose. Regenerative tourism aligns with this shift toward mindful and responsible travel.

06

Long-Term Sustainability

Without regenerative principles, tourism risks degrading the very destinations it depends on. By restoring natural systems and strengthening communities, tourism can remain viable for future generations.

Chitwan Safari Resort
Transition to Sustainable Tourism Destination

The village of Sauraha in Ratnagar Municipality is located in the buffer area of Chitwan National Park, where any land within a 500-meter distance from its buffer is considered part of the buffer zone. For centuries, Sauraha was a quiet, remote settlement inhabited primarily by the Tharu people—an ethnic group native to the Terai region. The Tharu lived in harmony with the dense tropical forests, practicing subsistence farming, fishing in the Rapti River, and building traditional mud-and-daub homes with thatched roofs. They possessed a unique resistance to malaria, which historically kept the inner Terai isolated from outsiders.

In 1973, the Government of Nepal established Chitwan National Park as the country's first national park to protect the endangered single-horned Asiatic rhinoceros and the Royal Bengal tiger. To clear the park area, local Tharu communities living inside the designated boundaries were forcibly relocated. This caused major social and cultural disruption for families who had cultivated the land for generations.

What started as a cluster of mud huts near the forest edge gradually transformed into a bustling tourist town. Locals and outside entrepreneurs opened lodges, guesthouses, restaurants, and safari agencies.

In this very area, after years of dedication to sustainable tourism growth and development, Chitwan Safari Resort are now taking rapid steps toward becoming a sustainable tourism destination. We firmly believe that sustainability cannot be achieved in isolation; it requires collective efforts of multidisciplinary and commitment to sustainable practices from the entire village population in guidance of PROF.

Today, Sauraha balances modern tourism with indigenous Tharu heritage, where visitors can experience traditional stick dances, local cuisine, and guided wildlife safaris while staying on the edge of the protected jungle.

Our approach involves fostering collaborative partnerships with local communities, promoting cultural exchanges, and initiating mutually beneficial projects. These initiatives enhance our relationships with the region and contribute to sustainable development.

Destination Engagement

We have partnership with the local communities and established a Community Based Organization (CBO) "Haibung Environment and Tourism development Committee".

We are now working to harmonize our efforts with existing governmental structures, local bodies, and civil society organizations that are already active in the project area.

Our Strategy for Achieving These Objectives

Our strategy includes the following key steps:

1. Developing a vision and raising awareness of Sauraha as a sustainable tourism destination.
2. Addressing the basic needs of both local and foreign tourists, local communities, and tourism entrepreneurs.
3. Promoting awareness and education on responsible tourism, waste management, and environmental protection.
4. Ensuring broad participation and involvement of stakeholders in planning and implementing sustainable tourism development.
5. Harmonizing agriculture, climate change adaptation, and biodiversity conservation with tourism development.
6. Engaging in partnerships with local communities, NGOs, the National Park Authority, and government bodies.
7. Advocating for proper policies for institutional and structural development in the location specific area.
8. Planning based on the identification of opportunities and strengths of the area.
9. Implementing adaptation measures to minimize development-induced risks, uncertainties and threats in the area.
10. Promoting involvement and coordination among the stakeholders.
11. Increasing public, private, and community participation in tourism development.
12. Encouraging similarity in construction, featuring traditional and eco-friendly construction, management, and operations.
13. Strengthening the enabling environment for tourism planning and biodiversity conservation through coaching and supporting existing structures and personnel in the elaboration of tourism management plans for model sites.

Through these planned strategic steps and concerted efforts, Chitwan Safari Resort aspires to become a model of sustainable tourism and a reference for others to follow in the pursuit of environmental conservation and community well-being.

Nestled in the Heart of Chitwan

Our resort sits in Sauraha, Ratnagar Municipality — within the buffer zone of Chitwan National Park, Nepal's first national park, established in 1973 to protect the endangered one-horned rhinoceros and Royal Bengal tiger.

For centuries, this land belonged to the Tharu people, who lived in harmony with the forest. Today, we honor that legacy by blending modern comfort with indigenous heritage, offering guests an authentic edge-of-the-jungle experience.
